“Having put our hands to the wheel, we set the course of our voyage. ... We have not entered upon this course without the most grave consideration.”

(William McWilliams on the formation of the Australian Country Party, Commonwealth Parliamentary Debates, 10 March 1920, p. 250)

“We conceive our role as a dual one of being at all times the specialist party with a sharp fighting edge, the specialists for rural industries and rural communities. At the same time we are the party which has the total co-ordinated concept of what is necessary for the growth and safety of the whole Australian nation.”

(John McEwen, The New South Wales Countryman, May 1968, p 2)

“A strong Country Party does keep the balance – the balance of stable, dependable government; the balance of development between city and country; the balance of economic activity; a balance between the rural industries and the other sectors of the community. ... We keep a balance between the extremes of political thought.”

(Doug Anthony, election policy speech, Lismore City Hall, 20 November 1972)

The National Party is ...

- The second oldest political party in the Commonwealth Parliament, having celebrated its Centenary on 22 January 2020.
- The most democratic, non-factionalised and stable political party in Australia, proud of its independent identity and offering equal opportunity to all.
- An organisation that
 - through its affiliated and associated State and Territory parties, has the largest financial membership across regional Australia of any political party
 - since its formation, has always been represented in the Commonwealth Parliament, has been an influential partner in Coalition governments for more than 60 years, and has provided three Prime Ministers – Earle Page, Arthur Fadden and John McEwen
 - by 2019 had contested 1192 electorates for House of Representatives general elections across regional Australia, winning 617 – a success rate of nearly 52 per cent
 - has accumulated an enviable record of achievements on the statute books
 - has ensured from the first Federal Coalition agreement that its Parliamentary Leader is the Deputy Prime Minister (formally titled as such from 1968) and acts as Prime Minister when that person is absent
 - while formed to drive better political outcomes for agricultural industries, has long been more than a farmers' party, fighting for better services, facilities, and opportunities for people living and working beyond the capital cities.
- Arguably, the Party's greatest achievement is its very existence, which has forced other parties to pay greater attention to the needs of regional Australia than would otherwise have been the case. Without the National Party, Federal policy would be dominated by city interests and city-based politicians.
- A Country Party brochure, Mileposts, charting achievements to 1950, observed:

You can't afford to be without a Country Party ...
Thank your stars there is a Country Party

Change Country Party to National Party and the statement remains true today.

Introduction

It is a momentous occasion for a political organisation to be marking its Centenary, and in the case of our Party especially so given that over those 100 years we have always been represented in the Commonwealth Parliament.

The National Party is the second oldest political party in the Parliament, having been formed on 22 January 1920 as the Australian Country Party.

This anniversary is testament to the determination of many thousands of members across Australia who have seen us as the best organisation to represent their interests.

While our origins were focused on improving the political consideration of primary producer interests, they have long since been expanded to the point where today we have policies that cover the whole range of government activity.

Our primary concentration is on improving the services provided to, and the lifestyles of, the nearly nine million people who live and work beyond the capital cities, as well as on increasing international trade opportunities for export industries, particularly the agricultural and resource sectors.

We are a powerful influence on policy directions, having provided many senior ministers as well as eleven Deputy Prime Ministers, three of whom also served as Prime Minister.

Our concentrated effort and determination has fundamentally and positively changed the way government delivers for the people of regional Australia. We will unashamedly maintain that emphasis into the future.

This publication briefly highlights the Party's history and documents the roll of all its senators and members, as well as ministers and organisational and parliamentary leaders. It is a record of the past and at the same time an example for future generations to follow.

Party origins

By the early 1900s, farm organisations across Australia were beginning to support political candidates who would promote their policies and objectives in their parliaments. They were concerned that farmers and graziers were overburdened by taxes, tariffs, inadequate transport and other infrastructure, unnecessary duplication of Federal and State administration, and the lack of local services.

To enhance the impact of their cause and harness the efforts of what were sympathetic individual and largely Independent parliamentarians into a single, unified group, the farm bodies began to form political organisations, each with their own constitutions.

The Country Party in Western Australia was the first, founded by the State's Farmers and Settlers' Association (FSA) on 12 March 1913 and winning ten seats in the Western Australian Parliament at the election the following year.

Country parties followed in Victoria in 1915, Queensland and South Australia in 1918, New South Wales in 1919 (originally named The Progressive Party of New South Wales until becoming the Country Party from August 1925), the Commonwealth Parliament in 1920, and Tasmania in 1922.

The South Australian Party merged with the then Liberal Federation to form the Liberal and Country League from 1932 until re-emerging as the Country Party in 1963. Between 1924 and 1928, the Tasmanian Party was gradually absorbed into the Nationalists. It was reformed in 1962, disbanded in 1975, revived as the National Party in 1994 and again disbanded in 1996. An Independent Tasmanian senator, Steve Martin, joined The Nationals in May 2018, reviving the Party's representation in the island State until being defeated at the May 2019 election. A Country Party was formed in the Northern Territory in 1966 and merged with the Liberal Party to become the Northern Territory Country Liberal Party (CLP) from 1974. The Queensland National and Liberal parties amalgamated into the Liberal National Party of Queensland (LNP) from 2008.

Because of their constitutional autonomy, the State and Territory parties are able to tailor their structures and operations to best meet the needs of their respective spheres of interest. In contrast, the Liberal and Labor parties work on a more centralised basis, with their State bodies being divisions and branches respectively of their Federal organisations.

Success through unity

The National Party has two great strengths that have helped it achieve many outcomes for the regions it represents, at Federal and State levels, and which have been cornerstones of its longevity: it is non-factionalised and the vast majority of its parliamentary representatives worked and were involved and known in their local communities before entering parliament, many of them having been prominent in service, community and industry clubs and organisations.

Everyone involved in the Party, from branch members to parliamentarians, has a united ambition – to improve the level of services and infrastructure in their electorates and throughout regional Australia. There is close co-operation between Federal and State MPs on achieving outcomes across all government jurisdictions.

The current Federal Parliamentary National Party is made up of people who, before entering Parliament, worked in occupations as diverse as journalism, the law, small business, agriculture, agricultural consultancy, economics, electrical engineering, accountancy, medicine, veterinary science, the police, teaching, banking, finance, and the trades.

They are people who know and understand what regional Australians expect from government and they work hard to bring those aspirations to fruition. An underlying priority across all affiliated and associated parties has been to close the gap in the quality of services, facilities and opportunities enjoyed by those in the cities and those elsewhere.

No other political party in Australia can demonstrate such unity and strength of purpose.

Arguably, the Party's greatest achievement has been to force other political parties to pay greater attention to the social and economic development of regional Australia than would otherwise have been the case. Without the Country/National Party, policy development would be dominated by city interests and city-based politicians.

The first Federal Parliamentary Country Party

The Australian Country Party (ACP) was established on 22 January 1920 by a meeting of nine members of the House of Representatives who had been elected on 13 December 1919 and who endorsed the ideals of the Australian Farmers' Federal Organisation (AFFO), which was formed in September 1916 and included delegates from State farm bodies.

The AFFO's core objectives were to prevent duplication of taxation and the overlapping of Federal/State administration; to obviate conflict between Commonwealth and State industrial laws and awards; and to encourage scientific agricultural education and co-operative trading in the interests of primary producers.

The nine members of the new ACP were joined by two more on 24 February 1920, giving a parliamentary strength of 11 on the cross benches. The governing Nationalists under Prime Minister Billy Hughes had 38 members in the House of Representatives and the Labor Party 26.

A Country Party meeting on 25 February 1920, which was chaired by William Gibson (Corangamite, Vic), agreed to elect an interim Leader, thereby providing time for the members to assess each other's strengths and weaknesses before electing a longer term Leader. The Tasmanian Member for Franklin since 1903, William McWilliams, who had been a Nationalist from 1917, was unanimously chosen for the role, with Edmund Jowett (Grampians, Vic) elected Deputy Leader and Earle Page (Cowper, NSW) Secretary and Whip.

Start of a new era: the first Parliamentary Leader of the Australian Country Party,
William McWilliams, Member for Franklin, Tasmania

McWilliams explained the new Party's philosophy to Parliament on 10 March 1920:

I may say at the outset that the Country party is an independent body quite separate from the Nationalists or the Labour party. ... We have appointed our own Leader and other officers. We take no part in the deliberations of Ministerialists or of the Opposition. We intend to support measures of which we approve, and hold ourselves absolutely free to criticize or reject any proposals with which we do not agree.

Page was perhaps more pragmatic in his recollection of the Party's role, writing in his 1963 memoirs, Truant Surgeon:

Though we lacked parliamentary experience, our aim was clear. The socialist policies of the Labour Party were anathema to us. While dissatisfaction existed among some members with the Hughes [Nationalist] regime, we were in agreement that it would be better to keep the Government on the rails than assist a Labour Government into office. We determined, therefore, to use our authority, not to bring the Nationalist Government down, but to influence it in every possible way to carry out the constructive policies of our platform. (Truant Surgeon, p. 84)

As the 'third party' in Parliament, the Country Party asked the Speaker to provide it with a separate Party Room – a request that was eventually granted after the 12 October 1929 election, when Parliament House office accommodation was rearranged. The Party has had its own Party Room ever since in both the Old and New Parliament buildings, whereas the Liberal and Labor parties have always alternated their Party Room depending on whether they are in Government or Opposition.

The Country Party's numbers increased by one from 1 July 1920, when Reginald Wilson, elected as a South Australian FSA candidate on an agreed Senate ticket with the Nationalists in December 1919, took up his seat and joined the Country Party. Being in the Senate, however, he did not attend Party meetings.

A further boost in numbers came in March 1921, when the Member for Robertson, NSW, since 1913, William Fleming, left the Nationalists and joined the Country Party, taking its House numbers to 12.

Controlling the traffic: when it came to which of the two major parties had precedence, the new Country Party, headed by 'policeman' William McWilliams, would decide (Bulletin, 4 March 1920)

Also in March 1921, a conference in Sydney of AFFO delegates and parliamentary representatives adopted the first formal Federal political platform of the Party. Under the slogan Production and a Fair Deal, it promoted, among other initiatives, reform to eliminate overlapping between Federal and State jurisdictions; a Federal convention to remodel the Australian Constitution and facilitate the subdivision of existing States; encouragement of industries essential to national development; the full encouragement of private enterprise in production and all forms of co-operative enterprise; a vigorous immigration policy; extension and cheapening of postal and telephonic communication in country areas; a resolute policy to develop the north of Australia; and a comprehensive system of water conservation and power production.

The Party reviewed its leadership positions at a meeting on 5 April 1921. McWilliams and Jowett did not recontest the leadership roles. Page was elected Leader, a position he held until September 1939, Henry Gregory (Dampier, WA) Deputy Leader, and Gibson, Secretary and Whip.

The Country Party's representation increased to 14 at the election on 16 December 1922. Nationalist numbers fell from 38 to 26. Labor was returned with 29 members and there were five Liberals and one Independent. The Country Party was essential to the continuation of a non-Labor administration. But Page refused to join a Coalition as long as Hughes was the Nationalist Leader. Ultimately, Hughes stood aside on 2 February 1923 in favour of Stanley Bruce.

Into Government

Page and Bruce forged the first Nationalist/Country Party Coalition Government, holding office until defeated by Labor under Jim Scullin in October 1929.

Page was Treasurer and effectively Deputy Prime Minister, being acknowledged as taking precedence in the Ministry after the Prime Minister and being Acting Prime Minister during Bruce's absences. The position of Deputy Prime Minister was not included in parliamentary records until it was formally established by John Gorton, at the behest of then Country Party Leader, John McEwen, on the day Gorton was first sworn in as Prime Minister, 10 January 1968.

However, Country/National Party leaders have always been, and continue to be, Deputy Prime Minister and Acting Prime Minister in Coalition governments. To this point, since the first Bruce/Page Coalition, the Party has provided eleven Deputy Prime Ministers, three of whom were also commissioned as Prime Minister.

The Bruce/Page agreement, which maintained the separate identities of the two parties, gave the Country Party five portfolios and the Nationalists six, and became the foundation Coalition agreement upon which ones of today are based.

Page and the Country Party were soon delivering impressive achievements as participants in the Government – introduction of the first radio broadcasting licences (1923), establishment of the Loan Council (1924), restructuring the Commonwealth Bank as a central bank (1924), establishing a rural credits department within the bank (1925), and establishing a Department of Markets (1925), the forerunner of today's Department of Agriculture.

The Scullin Government was defeated at the December 1931 election and the Nationalist Party under Joe Lyons, by then named the United Australia Party (UAP), governed in its own right until the election in September 1934, after which it briefly formed a minority government before establishing a Coalition with the Country Party from 9 November 1934. There was a further period when the UAP governed in its own right from 26 April 1939 to 14 March 1940, when the Coalition was reformed. All non-Labor governments since then have been Coalitions between the Country/National Party and the UAP/Liberal Party.

Over its 100 year history, the Country/National Party has been a partner in non-Labor governments for more than 60 years.

The first Coalition Opposition was established for the duration of the first Curtin Labor Government from October 1941 to September 1943. It was led by Arthur Fadden (Darling Downs, Qld), who, having been Prime Minister from August to October 1941, was elected unopposed to the role by a joint meeting of the UAP/ Country parties. On the return of the Curtin Government at the August 1943 election, the UAP and Country parties agreed to co-operate but not continue a formal Coalition Opposition.

After the Whitlam Labor Government's election in December 1972, Doug Anthony (Richmond, NSW) and Liberal Leader, Billy Snedden, agreed to co-operate but not form a Coalition Opposition. However, they did so after the Whitlam Government was re-elected in June 1974, largely because in the non-Coalition period Labor had been able to exploit policy differences between the conservative parties.

Election policies: Earle Page, 1928; Arthur Fadden, 1946; Doug Anthony, 1972

The non-Labor parties have formed Coalitions in Opposition ever since. The arrangements were briefly interrupted by the Joh for Canberra campaign in 1987, which broke the Coalition for 100 days between 28 April and 6 August.

The Country Party Prime Ministers

Three Federal Leaders have been Prime Minister, each taking on the role in difficult circumstances:

- Earle Page (Cowper, NSW) – 7-26 April 1939, following the death of Prime Minister Joe Lyons
- Arthur Fadden (Darling Downs, Qld) – 29 August-7 October 1941, following the resignation of Prime Minister Robert Menzies
- John McEwen (Murray, Vic) – 19 December 1967-10 January 1968, following the disappearance of Prime Minister Harold Holt.

(images courtesy National Archives of Australia. NAA: A1200, L42124; NAA: A6180, 4/2/77/30; NAA: A1200, L36581)

Because each served for a brief time, they are often disparagingly referred to as ‘caretaker’ or ‘stop gap’ prime ministers. Yet each was sworn in as Prime Minister with full authority and each made decisions and took actions that went far beyond the conventions of a caretaker government. They were very much prime ministers in their own right.

They were eminently qualified for their appointments, each having accumulated significant experience, not only as Deputy Prime Minister, but also as Acting Prime Minister before being called on to formally fill the Government’s top position.

Before being appointed Prime Minister, Page had been Acting Prime Minister for 540 days, Fadden for 137 days, and McEwen for 463 days. There was no-one in any of the governments concerned who was more qualified than these three to be the Prime Minister during the periods in question.

Page and McEwen each became Prime Minister after the death of Lyons and disappearance of Holt because they were the second most senior ministers in the respective governments. It was broadly accepted that they would hold the position until the UAP/Liberal Party elected a new leader. There was speculation during McEwen's term of considerable support for him to continue in the role, but McEwen would not countenance the prospect:

I think it is true that many people regarded me as the best man for the job. ... The great difficulty, though, was that I belonged to the smaller party in the coalition. To become the permanent Prime Minister I should have to had to leave the Country Party and join the Liberals. That was unthinkable. (John McEwen, recorded for the National Library of Australia, October/November 1974, printed as His Story 1983 p. 75; reprinted by Page Research Centre 2014, p. 68)

Fadden's situation was different from that of Page and McEwen. He was unanimously elected to take over as Prime Minister by a meeting of the joint UAP/Country parties on 29 August 1941, after Menzies resigned the prime ministership but remained UAP Leader. This was thus far the only time the joint parties have chosen the Prime Minister; normally, the UAP/Liberal Party alone elects its Leader, who then becomes Prime Minister in Coalition governments. Fadden's subsequent unopposed election by the joint parties as Opposition Leader of the first UAP/Country Party Coalition Opposition, a position he held from 7 October 1941 to 16 September 1943, was similarly unique.

Fadden's tenure as Prime Minister could have been longer had his budget not failed to pass the House of Representatives on a Labor motion supported by two Victorian Independents, one of them being the Independent Country Party Member for Wimmera, Alexander Wilson, who joined the Federal Country Party from 1943.

As part of its Centenary celebrations, the Federal organisation commissioned a statue in Canberra's parliamentary triangle to commemorate one of its Prime Ministers. The decision as to who should be cast in bronze was determined by a ballot of delegates to the annual meeting of Federal Council on 14 September 2019. The clear choice was John McEwen.

The Federal Organisation

Earle Page was keen to establish a Federal Party organisational structure that could develop a closer relationship with the State parties and help broaden electoral appeal to a wider section of the community than farmers and graziers.

The AFFO convened a conference in Melbourne on 23 and 24 March 1926. It was attended by 60 Country Party delegates from Queensland, New South Wales, Victoria, Tasmania, South Australia and Western Australia, including six women representatives – one from each State.

The result was the adoption of a Federal Party Constitution which established the Australian Country Party Association to be managed by a Central Council of 23, made up of the Federal Leader and two other representatives elected by the Federal Parliamentary Country Party; three delegates each from the Country Party organisations of New South Wales and Victoria; two delegates each from the organisations in Queensland, South Australia, Western Australia and Tasmania, and one woman representative appointed by the women's organisations in each State.

The State parties became affiliated with the Association and the first meeting of its Central Council was held in Sydney on 30 September 1926, at which Page was appointed Chairman – a position he held until his death in 1961. Affiliation fees for the State parties for the first year were set at £50 ($100) each for New South Wales and Victoria and £25 ($50) each for the other States.

The Association's first conference, held in Sydney from 1 to 3 June 1927, streamlined the Constitution by changing the name of Central Council to Federal Council, thereby avoiding confusion with State organisations, which were each governed by a Central Council. Federal Council continues to this day and is the governing body of the Federal Party.

Managing the administration of the Federal organisation fell, in an honorary capacity, to the General Secretary of the NSW Party, initially EJ Munro. The arrangement continued until the Party opened a Federal Secretariat in Canberra in 1968 and appointed its own Federal Director.

The June 1927 conference also broadened the Party's platform to include support for such objectives as uniform divorce laws; one authority for the assessment and collection of Federal and State land and income tax; Federal and State co-ordination in the provision of health services, notably the establishment of obstetric nursing and bush nursing centres in country districts; and increased development of country towns and secondary industries – decentralisation.

A conference in Melbourne in July 1937 further amended the Constitution to provide for the establishment of an executive, known today as the Federal Management Committee, to manage the affairs of the Party between meetings of Federal Council. It also changed the title Chairman of Federal Council to President.

In December 1943, it was agreed to drop the word ‘Association’ from the organisation’s name, so it became simply the Australian Country Party, and to recommend that the affiliated State parties adopt the same name (where necessary) with the addition of their State. For instance, the NSW Party had been named The United Country Party of New South Wales since September 1931, to harness electoral support from the New States Movement. All State parties accepted the recommendation.

Federal Council continued to progressively expand the Party’s platform and policy – as it does today. On 15 November 1957, it produced a document declaring that the Party was ‘truly National in character, embracing ALL sections of the community’. Policies covered areas including external affairs, trade, national development, closer settlement, repatriation, transport, finance and taxation, industrial relations, communism and socialisation, communications, population and migration, education, housing, health and social services.

Indeed, the Party’s policies and achievements over the past 100 years, while still strongly supporting sustainable agricultural and mineral production and exports, have significantly benefited broader regional community interests.

Originally written off by its detractors as unnecessary, the Party has proved its ability to overcome internal and external difficulties and challenges and to adapt to changing political, demographic and economic circumstances. It remains essential to the framework of rural and regional Australia.

Further recognising the need to remain electorally relevant, the Federal Party changed its name from Australian Country Party to National Country Party of Australia on 2 May 1975 and to National Party of Australia from 16 October 1982.

Hard to shed the image: the Party's name changed from National Country Party to National Party from 16 October 1982, but cartoonist Geoff Pryor, in this depiction of Peter Nixon (left), Doug Anthony and Ian Sinclair, was not going to let the 'cocky' image die easily, The Canberra Times, 19 October 1982
(Geoff Pryor, NLA Pic Drawer 9171#Pic/3697/195/nla)

Today, Federal Council convenes an annual meeting, usually held in Canberra, and may convene additional special meetings if necessary. The annual meeting considers, among other issues, policy motions submitted by the Federal Parliamentary Party and from affiliated State Party conferences, women's sections and the Young Nationals, and also elects its office bearers and its Federal Management Committee.

The Party convenes a Federal Conference once in the life of each Commonwealth Parliament, or once every three years. Conference includes delegates from all the affiliated State Party Federal electorate councils throughout Australia and specifically considers Party policy.

After its establishment in 2008, the Queensland LNP continued the previous Queensland National Party's affiliated status with the Federal Party. The Northern Territory CLP is an associated organisation. Its delegates to Federal Council and Conference may vote on policy issues, but not participate in office bearer elections, or motions which seek to amend the Party's Federal Constitution, or relate to the administration of the Party.

Only Federal Council has the power to amend the Party Constitution. Constitutional motions require a two-thirds majority vote to be carried.

Communicating

Getting the message out on policy positions is a key objective of any political party. From its earliest years, the Country Party was adept at this. Its first Federal Leader, William McWilliams, was a journalist and newspaper proprietor. The second Leader, Earle Page, while primarily a doctor and surgeon, was also involved in the country press. Other early Country Party parliamentarians with journalistic or proprietorial newspaper interests included Percy Stewart (Wimmera, Vic), Henry Gregory (Dampier, WA), Victor Thompson (New England, NSW) and Robert Elliott (Senate, Vic) – and more would follow in the years to come.

Publications over the years: (left, clockwise from top left) Fighting Facts – The Tariff, 1931; You won't vote Labour, 1931; Menzies-Fadden Government financial record, 1949-1955; The Rural Record, 1922-1929; Election Policy Speech, 1975; Platform and Policy, 1953; (right) anti-bank nationalisation poster for the 10 December 1949 Federal election (NSW Nationals)

When journalist Ulrich Ellis became Page's political secretary early in 1928, he began writing publicity for distribution to the press and State Country parties. He was a prodigious writer and researcher. He took over producing the Country Party Weekly Bulletin, which contained comments on current political issues and was sent to most newspapers.

In 1932 he formed the grandly titled Federal Country Party Bureau of Publicity, Research and Information. Working from Page's office in Parliament House, Canberra, he produced the Weekly Bulletin, pamphlets, and speakers' notes for use by parliamentarians and candidates. In 1936 he turned the Weekly Bulletin into a more substantial Country Party Bulletin, circulated to 750 newspapers throughout Australia. He opened an independent Office of Rural Research, located in the Canberra suburb of Manuka, in July 1948, and continued producing political material until closing the office when he retired from Page's staff early in 1960.

Ellis wrote books on the history of the Federal and NSW Country parties and the NSW New States Movement, and was central to helping compile Page's biography, Truant Surgeon, published in 1963.

Since those days there have been many Federal Party publications, including Balance magazine, produced on the initiative of Doug Anthony in the early 1970s. All these supplemented publications produced by State parties. Today's communications are largely circulated as newsletters and roundups to Party members and the media via the Internet, although some States still circulate printed magazines. The Party's parliamentary and secretariat staff, at Federal and State levels, continue to be heavily involved in documenting its achievements and objectives.

Helping to spread the Party's message: Balance magazines produced in October, November 1973 and May 1974 (Federal Secretariat)

Federal Parliamentary Party

The Federal Parliamentary National Party is made up of those people who have been preselected by their affiliated or associated State or Territory organisation and have won election to the Senate or House of Representatives, and sit as Nationals in Canberra.

The Parliamentary Party operates under its own rules, providing they are not inconsistent with the Party's Federal Constitution. It has the right to adopt policy positions that are different from those of Federal Council or Conference, providing the Federal Leader explains the reasons to the Federal Management Committee. It also has the right to decide whether or not to enter into, or terminate, a Coalition agreement, after consultation with the Federal Management Committee.

The entire Parliamentary Party (senators and members) elects its Federal Leader, Deputy Leader and Parliamentary Whips for the House of Representatives. The Party's senators alone elect their Senate Leader, Deputy and Whip.

The largest parliamentary representation in the Party's history to date: twenty-three members and eight senators, making a total of 31, achieved at the December 1975 election, (left to right, back row) Tom McVeigh, John Sullivan, Sandy MacKenzie, Peter Fisher, Bob King, Col Carige, Stephen Lusher, Ray Braithwaite, Glen Sheil, Stan Collard, Frank O'Keefe, Tom Tehan, Doug Scott, Bruce Lloyd, Sam Calder; (middle row) Ron Maunsell, Ian Robinson, Clarrie Millar, David Thomson, Tom Drake-Brockman, Mac Holten, Bern Kilgariff, Bob Katter (snr), Jim Corbett; (sitting) Phil Lucock, Jim Webster, Ian Sinclair, Doug Anthony, Federal Leader, Peter Nixon, Ralph Hunt, Evan Adermann

The first woman member of the Federal Parliamentary Party was Agnes Robertson from Western Australia. Originally elected to the Senate for the Liberal Party at the December 1949 election – becoming the fifth woman to enter the Commonwealth Parliament – she switched to the Country Party from 1955 until her retirement in June 1962.

Other Party women elected to the Commonwealth Parliament have been Flo Bjelke-Petersen (Senate, Qld), De-Anne Kelly (Dawson, Qld), Kay Hull (Riverina, NSW), Fiona Nash (Senate, NSW), Bridget McKenzie (Senate, Vic), Michelle Landry (Capricornia, Qld), Susan McDonald (Senate, Qld), Perin Davey (Senate, NSW) and Sam McMahon (Senate, NT).

Hull became the Parliamentary Party's first female Whip in the House of Representatives, while Nash and McKenzie became Deputy Federal Leaders, Nash being the first woman to hold the position. Kelly, Nash, McKenzie and Landry were appointed to ministries. Bjelke-Petersen was the Party's Senate Whip in 1993 and its Deputy Senate Leader from 1985 to 1990. After the 2019 election, McKenzie was elected as the Party's first female Senate Leader (as well as being Deputy Federal Leader), while Davey was elected as its Senate Whip.

Six, or more than 28 per cent, of the 21-member Parliamentary Party after the May 2019 election were women, and of the Party's five senators, four were women.

Women have also risen to prominent positions in affiliated or associated parliamentary parties. For instance, at the beginning of 2020, two were State Parliamentary Leaders – Mia Davies (WA) and Deb Frecklington (Qld), both having previously been Deputy Leaders, and three were current Deputy Leaders – Steph Ryan (Vic), Jacqui Boyde (WA), and Lia Finocchiaro (NT). Others have been appointed ministers or shadow ministers and many more have won preselection from their respective parties to contest Federal, State or Territory elections.

Holding firm

The Country/National Party has generally been adept at holding its House of Representatives numbers.

There have been exceptions. Between 1937 and 1943, its Lower House numbers fell from 15 to nine, and between 1987 and 2007 it was gradually reduced from 19 to 10.

On the other side of the coin, despite the Coalition losing government to Labor at the 1972 election, the Country Party retained all of its 20 seats in the House of Representatives. In the October 1980 election, at which the Fraser-Anthony Coalition Government was returned, the Liberals suffered a loss of 13 Lower House seats, while the National Country Party gained one, up from 19 to 20. Similarly, while the Liberals lost 14 seats at the 2016 Federal election, the Nationals won an additional one, Murray in Victoria, providing the Coalition with a one seat majority in the House of Representatives and giving it a further term in office.

In 2019, contrary to most opinion polls and predictions, the Party held all its Lower House seats, most notably Capricornia, Dawson, Flynn, Hinkler, Maranoa and Wide Bay in Queensland, where all incumbent members substantially increased their majorities, ranging from a two-party preferred increase of almost five per cent in Wide Bay to an impressive 11.72 per cent in Capricornia. Another seat to comprehensively defy the odds was Page in New South Wales, where the two-party preferred vote increased by more than seven per cent.

Overall, the Party recorded positive two-party preferred swings in 13 of its 16 House of Representatives seats – all against the background of predictions that Labor was heading for certain victory. The Coalition Government was returned.

The Party has long proved its significance as an essential partner in Coalition. For instance, after the 1975 and 1977 elections, Malcolm Fraser's Liberals could have governed in their own right. So too could John Howard's Liberals after the 1996 election. Both leaders appreciated the additional strength the Party could bring to their administrations and negotiated Coalition governments – doubtless mindful of the fact that future elections could make National Party numbers essential to continuing in office.

Moments in history

The Party has been to the fore in momentous historical events – for instance:

Negotiating in critical times: Earle Page and British Prime Minister Winston Churchill photographed at the first meeting of the Pacific War Council, London, 10 February 1942

The Curtin Government confirmed the Fadden Government's appointment of Page as Australia's ministerial envoy to the British War Cabinet from September 1941 and appointed him to the Pacific War Council. Page was central to pressing Australia's interests on many critical issues, including having Australian divisions in the Mediterranean and North Africa reassembled as a complete corps under the command of Australian General Thomas Blamey, the need to strengthen the defences of Malaya and Singapore, Japan's bombing of Pearl Harbour on 7 December 1941 and almost simultaneous occupation of Thailand and Malaya, its invasion of Burma and the Dutch East Indies (Indonesia), the fall of Singapore on 15 February 1942, and the first bombing attack on Darwin four days later. Page did not return to Australia until 15 August 1942.

All hope gone: the Cabinet minute of 4 January 1968 noting the agreement to abandon the search for the body of Harold Holt, who went missing in the surf off Cheviot Beach, near Portsea, Victoria, on 17 December 1967, and concurring with Prime Minister John McEwen's proposed announcement to that effect, issued the same day

McEwen told a press conference in Canberra on 20 December 1967 – the day after being commissioned as Prime Minister: 'It's only in rare circumstances that a man could become Prime Minister and not be warmed and elated by the fact, but I am neither warmed nor elated by the circumstances that have unexpectedly precipitated me into this position.'

Dismissal: Malcolm Fraser (left) and Doug Anthony emerge from Government House after being commissioned to form a caretaker Coalition administration by the Governor-General, Sir John Kerr (centre), following the dismissal of the Whitlam Labor Government on 11 November 1975. Anthony's Deputy, Ian Sinclair, is behind his Leader and partially obscured. Fraser said the National Country Party's unwavering support for blocking budget Supply bills in the lead up to the dismissal was 'critically important'.

Lighter moments

During the Fraser/Anthony Coalition Government (1975-1983), Deputy Prime Minister, Doug Anthony, became renowned for working as Acting Prime Minister from a caravan on his holiday property at New Brighton, on the NSW far north coast, over Christmas/New Year while the Prime Minister was on leave.

Initially, Anthony had no telephone contact to the caravan and had to keep in touch with Canberra from a public phone box in the township. Communications were subsequently improved so that he had direct telephone, telex and Vocabex contact from the caravan. Anthony acknowledged that the caravan office became iconic:

I'll probably be remembered for the caravan more than anything else in my political career. When the nation heard I was running the show from my caravan it sent a message that it was Christmas, time to relax, everything was on hold, but also everything was being looked after.

(Doug Anthony, Politics in the Blood – The Anthonys of Richmond, p218)

Getting through: even though officially on holiday, Malcolm Fraser liked to contact Doug Anthony to canvass issues. Cartoonist Geoff Pryor had his own take on such occasions, The Canberra Times, 12 January 1982 (Geoff Pryor; nla PIC Drawer 9161#PIC/3697/7/nla.obj-156383532)

The Wombat Trail

Journalists accompanying the National Party Leader on election campaigns began in the early 1970s to dub it the Wombat Trail, because of the way it crisscrossed regional Australia in the comfortable, yet somewhat ponderous, Hawker Siddeley HS748 of the RAAF's VIP fleet. The aircraft was particularly suited to Country Party campaigns because of its ability to handle short country airstrips, enabling the Leader to visit towns and communities across the outback.

Doug Anthony introduced a wombat tie that was presented to accompanying journalists and news crews after the 1983 Federal election, and Ian Sinclair followed suit for the 1984 and 1987 elections. On a plain background, the tie featured a large gold wombat lying on its back clutching what most presumed to be a can of beer.

After the 1996 election, which installed the Howard/Fischer Coalition Government, the Party's Federal Director, Cecile Ferguson, presented Tim Fischer with a carved wooden wombat, which resulted in the birth of a tradition whereby it is handed on from Leader to Leader. Michael McCormack took the wombat on his 'trail' during the 2019 election campaign.

Flexing muscles

The Party has always been forthright in representing not only constituent, but also national, interests. When necessary, it has supported positions that many of its own members initially opposed. By way of examples:

- Largely because of differences on tariff policy, Earle Page would not accept Joe Lyons' conditions for a Coalition after the 15 September 1934 election, at which the UAP lost several seats. When Lyons, leading a minority government, moved for a special adjournment of the House for the Melbourne Cup, Page advised that the Country Party was opposed to the recess and all Labor members indicated they would support him. Lyons withdrew the motion and negotiated a new Coalition government that held office from 9 November 1934 to 26 April 1939.
- In the lead up to the 1949 Federal election, which installed 23 years of continuous Coalition Government, the Country Party Leader, Arthur Fadden, was unconvinced by Liberal Party Leader Robert Menzies' position that petrol rationing, which had been in place throughout World War II, could not be lifted immediately. He persuaded Menzies to his view and declared in his election policy speech at Boonah, Queensland, on 17 November 1949: 'We pledge ourselves to free Australia from petrol restrictions as early as possible in the New Year. ... Our slogan brings hope to a browbeaten people – Empty out the Chifley Socialists and fill the bowzers.' The announcement ending petrol rationing was made on 8 February 1950.
- John McEwen, as Minister for Trade, took on the responsibility of negotiating the first Australia-Japan Trade Treaty. He understood the importance of such an agreement to Australia's trading interests, but also recognised that, barely a decade after the end of the World War II, in which so many Australians suffered at the hands of the Japanese, the concept could be highly unpopular. As he recalled in his memoirs: 'At all times I was careful to describe the treaty as my policy, not the government's policy. ... I was prepared to carry the political responsibility for this on my own.'
- When McEwen was Prime Minister, from 19 December 1967 to 10 January 1968, he made it clear the Country Party would not work with the Liberal Party if it elected its Deputy Leader, Bill McMahon, to succeed Harold Holt, because he did not trust McMahon. The Liberals elected John Gorton instead.

Squashed: cartoonist Jeff identifies that Bill McMahon's chances of becoming Liberal leader and Prime Minister have been thwarted by McEwen,

- The Country Party argued tenaciously to successfully protect the competitiveness of commodity exports affected by Australian dollar revaluations in November 1967 and December 1971.
- During the Fraser/Anthony Coalition Government from 1975 to 1983, the team of Doug Anthony, Ian Sinclair (New England, NSW) and Peter Nixon (Gippsland, Vic) was often seen as having undue influence on Cabinet decisions.

- In December 1983, Doug Anthony encouraged his National Party senators to cross the floor and support a Hawke Labor Government proposal to increase the size of the Commonwealth Parliament from 125 to 148 members and 64 to 76 senators. The Liberals under Andrew Peacock opposed the enlargement, but Anthony justified his position on the grounds that there had been no significant increase in the number of members or senators since 1949, yet over the intervening years the number of eligible voters had almost doubled. The size of the Parliament was increased.
- Deputy Prime Minister Tim Fischer (Farrer, NSW) firmly supported tougher gun laws in the wake of the Port Arthur shooting massacre on 28 April 1996, despite strong opposition from many across the National Party.

A bold move: Tim Fischer faced hostile meetings of National Party members across Australia. He stood his ground, warning that if gun laws were not tightened, a total ban could be the end result.

- During the sale of the second and third tranches of Telstra between 1999 and 2005, the Nationals secured more than $4.6 billion for programs to improve and secure regional telecommunications services, despite Treasurer Peter Costello's wish that all sale revenues be directed towards reducing Commonwealth debt.
- Mainly through its backbenchers, the Party led the debate resulting in the establishment in 2017 of the Royal Commission into Misconduct in the Banking, Superannuation and Financial Services industry.

Longest Serving Senators and Members

Five party senators and members are among the roll of parliamentarians who served more than 30 years in the Commonwealth Parliament:

- Earle Christmas Grafton Page (Cowper, NSW), 42 years
- Walter Jackson Cooper (Senate, Qld), 36 years 7 months
- John McEwen (Echuca, Indi, Murray, Vic) 36 years 5 months
- Ian McCahon Sinclair (New England, NSW) 34 years 9 months
- Ronald Leslie Doyle Boswell (Senate, Qld) 31 years 3 months.

Cooper's term was served over two periods – as a Nationalist from 17 November 1928 to 30 June 1932, and with the Country Party from 1 July 1935 to 30 June 1968.

Women's Federal Council

At each annual meeting of their governing bodies, the affiliated parties elect women delegates to represent their State on the Women's Federal Council (WFC), which was largely initiated by John McEwen and held its inaugural meeting on 24 November 1960 as the Conference of Country Party Women's Representatives. The Conference agreed on 7 December 1962 that it should be known as the WFC. This does not mean women were previously ignored in Party affairs; far from it. The inaugural Federal Party Constitution of 1926 provided for a woman delegate from each State to be on the Australian Country Party Association, and the State parties involved women on their Central Councils from an early time. Today, the Federal and State Party organisations are strongly represented by women, including at executive level.

The WFC considers resolutions from State women's organisations or delegates and undertakes research to help in the development of Federal Party policy on a wide range of issues affecting women and families, notably in regional Australia, including health services, education, drug and alcohol abuse, transport, domestic violence, and communications. The WFC President is a member of the Federal Management Committee. She and additional women delegates are accredited to Federal Council and Conference.

As WFC President, Helen Dickie, from NSW, pioneered the Party's first policy on women, adopted unanimously by Federal Council in 1992. Up to that time, the Party's philosophy was that its policies applied equally to men and women.

The WFC also administers the biennial Shirley McKerrow Scholarship aimed at helping female members of parties affiliated or associated with the National Party of Australia to become strong political and community leaders.

The scholarship helps to cover travel and accommodation costs, enabling the winner to undertake a period of voluntary work experience in the office of a Federal or State parliamentarian.

Leading the way at organisational level

At organisational level, the Federal Party has led the way with the election or appointment of women to senior positions.

In June 1973, Doug Anthony appointed Stella Swinney, a foundation member of and former major in the Australian Women's Army Services and retired principal of Duval College at the University of New England, NSW, as a special advisor on women's issues, attached to the Federal Secretariat. It was the first such appointment by a political organisation.

Shirley McKerrow was the first woman to head a State political organisation as President of the Victorian Party from 1976 to 1981. She then became the first woman to be Federal President of a political party, holding the position in the National Party's organisation from 1981 to 1987. In 1997, she was elected the first female Chairman of John McEwen House Pty Ltd, the company that manages the Federal Secretariat and its property, holding the position until retiring in 2016.

Helen Dickie became the NSW Party's and the State's first woman to lead a political party organisation in 1997 and went on to be elected the second female Federal President from 1999 to 2005. Christine Ferguson followed Dickie's footsteps, being NSW State Chairman from 2007 to 2012 and Federal President from 2012 to 2015.

Other women to have been senior office bearers of Federal Council have included Pam Stallman (Qld) Federal Secretary 2003-2014; Ann McKenzie (Qld) Federal Secretary 2014-2018; Emma Watts (NSW) Chair, Policy Standing Committee 2014-2018 and Federal Secretary since 2018; Katrina Hodgkinson (NSW) Vice-President 2018-2019; and Susan McDonald (Qld) Federal Treasurer since 2019.

Cecile Ferguson became the first woman Federal Director of a political organisation when she took over the National Party's Federal Secretariat from 1992 to 1997. Another female Federal Director was Gaye White in 2000-2001. While not formally appointed Federal Director, Jenny Bailey managed the Secretariat from 1977 to 1979.

(Federal Secretariat/NSW Nationals)

There are many more women who have given, and continue to give, outstanding service to the parties across Australia at branch, electorate council, executive and parliamentary levels, and as organisational or parliamentary staff.

Young Nationals

The Young Australian Country Party Federal Council was formed in 1967, with Mike Ahern, who would become a Premier of Queensland, elected its first President, from 1967-1969.

Known today as the Young National Party of Australia, it is governed by a Federal Council made up of delegates elected by the young Party organisations of affiliated States and associated organisations. The Young Nationals Federal Council meets annually immediately prior to the Annual Meeting of Federal Council. It may convene meetings at other times, as well as a Young Nationals Federal Conference once in the life of each Commonwealth Parliament or once every three years.

The Young Nationals President is a member of the Federal Management Committee and a delegate to Federal Council and Federal Conference. Each affiliated State Party, either through its Young Nationals organisation, or through its conference or executive, nominates further delegates to Federal Council and Federal Conference, so the younger Party members are represented at all levels of the organisation. Many have subsequently sought preselection and several have been elected to parliament. The current young members are the core to ensuring the Party continues to grow into its next century.

Thus far, five women have been elected as President of the Federal Young Nationals, the first being Judy Brewer (Vic) in 1987, who later married Federal Leader and Deputy Prime Minister, Tim Fischer – himself a product of the NSW Young Country Party.

The Party has a Federal Secretariat in Canberra, John McEwen House, named after the former Leader and the man who drove its establishment and opening by the Prime Minister, John Gorton, on 4 November 1968.

As McEwen said at the time:

This provides for the first time a physical home for the Country Party in the Nation's capital. Our party is a federation of State parties, as indeed our country is a federation of States. Each of our State parties has its own home in the capital cities and its own secretariat there. But we have worked in a fairly disorganised manner at the Federal level. And this [the Secretariat], thanks to the work of a multitude of people, provides us with a home, a work centre, an ideas centre and I am sure that the value of this will be revealed as the years go on.

Since the early 1960s, McEwen had been determined that the Party should have an independent research and support facility for the Parliamentary Party, especially during times of Opposition when it would be denied much access to advice from the public service. Such support role had been substantially provided by Ulrich Ellis up to the time of his retirement from Earle Page's staff in 1960.

McEwen was concerned that, without its own secretariat, the Parliamentary Party would be heavily reliant on material generated by the Liberal Federal Secretariat, including in election campaigns, with its obvious emphasis on Liberal Party priorities. He won support for the Country Party secretariat project at a meeting of the Federal Executive (Federal Management Committee) in June 1965, and a company to oversee the building development and future secretariat and property management, John McEwen House Pty Ltd, was established in 1966.

The original single storey building on National Circuit, Barton, near Parliament House, was redeveloped into a three storey building between 1994 and 1996. Still bearing the John McEwen House name, it was opened by his widow, Lady Mary McEwen, on 8 November 1996, with John Gorton among the guests.

Today, as well as providing research and background briefing for the Federal Parliamentary Party, the Federal Secretariat co-ordinates and organises meetings of Federal Council and its committees, Federal Conference, Federal Management Committee, Women's Federal Council, and the Young Nationals. During Federal election and referendum campaigns, it helps to co-ordinate the Federal Leader's campaign and provide campaign material to State secretariats and candidates throughout Australia.

The Nixon Report

After the 1987 election, Federal Council established a committee under the chairmanship of the former Minister for Primary Industry, Peter Nixon, to comprehensively review the Party's structures and Constitution – the first such inquiry in the Party's history. Other Committee members were former Party Federal President and Fraser Government minister, Ralph Hunt, from NSW; the Western Australian Party President, John Paterson; and Queensland Party Executive member and Queen's Counsel, David Russell.

What became known as the Nixon Report was handed down on 6 May 1988 – a document spanning 86 pages and containing 68 recommendations and conclusions. It also recommended a substantial re-write of the Federal Constitution, as well as changes to Party structures to ensure better co-ordination and co-operation between the State and Federal parties.

Streamlining the organisation: Chairman of the Committee of Review into the Future Direction of the National Party of Australia, Peter Nixon
(Australian Information Service/Federal Secretariat)

The report was adopted by Federal Council in July 1988, as was the revised Constitution, with minor amendments. The State parties progressively implemented necessary consequential amendments to their constitutions, leading to greatly improved levels of co-operation, information sharing and strategic planning. The report was a landmark in the Party's history.

The Nationals brand

In a further move to increase uniformity in Party presentation across Australia, a Federal Conference in Canberra on 11 October 2003 endorsed the use of The Nationals as the Party's uniform shortened name and logo for all promotional material and Federal election campaigns. It also recommended that the State parties do likewise, which they did.

Changing logos: (left to right, top) emerging Federal logo 1972; logo in green and white adopted with the name change to National Country Party, May 1975; modified to green and gold; (bottom) including the National Flag from 11 August 1984; the current logo, adopted on 11 October 2003. Prior to the early 1970s, the Party generally used red, white and blue as its colours, accompanied by the name Country Party (Federal Secretariat)

Mergers

By the mid-2000s, the Queensland National and Liberal parties were coming to the view that their future electoral prospects would be served best by amalgamating into one party. They became the Liberal National Party of Queensland (LNP) from 26 July 2008. The Party is affiliated with the National Party and a Division of the Liberal Party. This was not the first time the non-Labor parties in Queensland had worked as one. The Nationalist and Country parties merged to become the Country and Progressive National Party for 12 years from 1925.

Under the current arrangements, Queensland House of Representatives electorates and Senate positions are designated as being National Party or Liberal Party, and the members and senators sit accordingly with those parties in the Commonwealth Parliament.

The arrangements have worked well for more than ten years. The Federal National Party Leader from December 2007 to October 2016, Warren Truss, held the Queensland seat of Wide Bay and was technically a member of the LNP from July 2008. But his commitment to the Federal National Party never diminished and was never questioned. The same has applied to LNP ministers, members and senators sitting with the Nationals.

A similar situation applies with regard to the associated Northern Territory CLP. Grant Tambling, the Member for Northern Territory from 1980 to 1983, sitting with the National Country/National Party, returned as a senator from 1987 to 2001, during which time he was the National Party's Deputy Senate Leader on two occasions, from 1990 to 1993 and 2000 to 2001.

Another Territory senator, Nigel Scullion, sat with the National Party until his retirement in May 2019. He was the Party's Senate Leader from 2007 to 2008, its Deputy Parliamentary Leader from 2007 to 2013 (the first Deputy Leader to come from the Senate) and its Senate Leader again from 2013 to 2019, as well as on occasions acting as Federal Leader.

State National Party organisations elsewhere have maintained their independence, as has the Federal Party.

Landmark achievements in Government

The Country/National Party has been responsible for many landmarks in the development of Australia, too numerous to quantify. A sample of Federal achievements in Government includes:

1920 to 1960

- the nation's first radio broadcasting licences (1923)
- tax averaging for primary producers (1924)
- restructured the Commonwealth Bank as a central bank (1924)
- Department of Markets, forerunner of the contemporary Department of Agriculture (1925)
- Rural Credits Department within the Commonwealth Bank (1925) and the Commonwealth Savings Bank (1927)
- Council for Scientific and Industrial Research – today's CSIRO (1926)
- Commonwealth funding for roads through the Main Roads Development Act 1923 and the first Federal Aid Roads Agreement (1926)
- development of rural automatic telephone exchanges (1928)
- the first Commonwealth-State Transport Advisory Council (1929)
- Australian Agricultural Council (1935)
- Australian Trade Commissioner Service – now Austrade (1934)
- National Health and Medical Research Council (1936)
- development of beef roads across northern and central Australia (1949-1971)
- abolition of petrol rationing (1950)
- free milk in schools for children under 13 (1950)
- free medical treatment for pensioners (1951) and free medicine for pensioners (1951-1952)
- abolition of Commonwealth land tax (1952)
- expanded hospital benefits scheme (1952) and introduction of first medical benefits scheme (1953) leading to comprehensive national health service (1955-1956)
- Australia's first regional university, the University of New England, with Earle Page its first chancellor (1954-1955)

Notes:

First election contested as The Australian Country Party (ACP). The ACP was formed on 22 January 1920 by a meeting of nine members of the House of Representatives who had been elected on 13 December 1919. They were joined by two more on 24 February 1920, so that when Parliament opened on 26 February 1920, the ACP had a parliamentary strength of 11.

From now on includes candidates elected for the Northern Territory Country Liberal Party (CLP) who sat in Canberra with the Country/National Party. The CLP was formed by a merger of Country and Liberal Party interests in July 1974. The Country Party in the Northern Territory was formed in 1966. This was also the first election contested by the Federal Party as the National Country Party of Australia, and the election which returned more Party members, 23, than at any other time in its history thus far.

First election contested as the National Party of Australia. The Party's constitutional name was changed to The Nationals from 14 October 2006 and reverted back to National Party of Australia from 1 June 2013.

* The increased number of candidates was due to the increase in the number of House of Representatives seats from 125 to 148 and the resultant substantial changes to many electoral boundaries.

 The large number of candidates was due to the Queensland National Party supporting the running of candidates in all 13 electorates in each of South Australia and Western Australia as part of the Joh for Canberra campaign.

From now on includes Liberal National Party of Queensland (LNP) candidates and members elected in seats deemed to be National Party seats in the House of Representatives. The LNP was formed by a merger of the Queensland National and Liberal parties on 26 July 2008.

 The seats won column for 2010 includes Tony Crook, who won the Western Australian seat of O'Connor, but sat as an Independent Western Australian National until joining the Federal Nationals in May 2012. He retired at the August 2013 election.

Seats won compared to numbers in Parliament

The 617 election wins to 2019 have resulted in 131 Party candidates from around Australia being elected to the House of Representatives. The reason why the number of members is significantly lower than the total seats won is simply because many members were re-elected over a long period of time. For instance, 48 members held their seats for 15 years or more, while 25 were returned for 20 years or more. That is testimony to the confidence of local voters in the ability of their elected representatives to pursue their issues and concerns in the Commonwealth Parliament.

Similarly, in the Senate, where the Party's representation over the past 100 years has totalled 56, 18 served for 12 years or more and four for 20 years or more.

The Page Research Centre was established in 2002 and formally launched by then National Party Leader and Deputy Prime Minister, John Anderson, on 11 February 2003.

Acting independently from the National Party, the Centre researches and explores contemporary issues, especially those affecting rural and regional Australia. Its findings are published and made available to Commonwealth and State governments.

In recent research, the Centre developed a paper in 2018 examining the rewards and risks of biofuels in Australia; in 2018/19 a paper on improving school education, especially in regional and rural areas; and in 2019, together with the Menzies Research Centre, a paper comparing the economic impact on consumers of the targets of Labor and the Coalition to reduce greenhouse gas emissions.

In 2007 the Centre began a project to preserve the history of the National Party at Federal and State levels. This was the beginning of the Page Research Centre Library, located at the Charles Sturt University, Wagga Wagga, NSW. The Library continues to accumulate a large range of documents, diaries, memos, newspaper articles, personal papers, photographs, and audio and visual tapes, CDs and DVDs. Access to these is available to researchers interested in the Party's history.

The Centre also supports the publication of books on National Party history. More information on the Centre is available at <www.page.org.au>.

Notes:

* Page and McEwen tied in the ballot for the leadership. To break the deadlock, the Party Room agreed to proceed with the election of its Deputy Leader – for which Fadden had overwhelming support – and then appoint the Deputy as Acting Leader. With the deepening war crisis and Prime Minister Menzies overseas, the Party Room confirmed Fadden as Leader on 12 March 1941. It also agreed to leave the Deputy's position vacant.

 Joyce was advised by the New Zealand High Commission in Canberra on 10 August 2017 that he may be a New Zealand citizen by descent in light of his father's New Zealand heritage, potentially bringing into question his right to serve in the Commonwealth Parliament, as per Section 44 of the Australian Constitution. Joyce requested that the matter be referred for adjudication to the High Court of Australia and immediately took the necessary action to renounce any right to New Zealand citizenship that he might have. On 27 October 2017 the High Court ruled him ineligible to be a parliamentarian. A by-election for his seat of New England, NSW, was announced for 36 days later, on 2 December 2017. While Joyce remained the Party's Federal Leader pending his return at the by-election, Nigel Scullion became Interim Parliamentary Leader. The Liberal Party's Deputy Leader and Foreign Minister, Julie Bishop, became Acting Prime Minister during three absences overseas by the Prime Minister during the by-election period, while the position of Deputy Prime Minister remained vacant. Joyce resumed his portfolio and Deputy Prime Minister responsibilities from 6 December 2017 after winning the New England by-election in a landslide.

 Gregory resigned as Deputy Leader over a disagreement on Coalition strategy. As the Parliament rose for the summer recess on 10 December (and was subsequently prorogued twice) and did not resume until 28 June 1922, the Deputy Leader's position was not filled until the pre-session Country Party meeting on 27 June 1922, when Fleming was elected. His tenure was short-lived as he lost his NSW seat of Robertson at the election on 16 December 1922. Gibson was elected to replace him at the pre-sessional Party meeting on 16 January 1923.

+ The eldest of Page's three sons, Earle junior, was killed by lightning while moving cattle on the family property, Heifer Station, Grafton, in January 1933. As a result Page was absent from Parliament for nine months until 4 October 1933. The Party Room appointed Paterson Acting Leader in the meantime.

++ With the confirmation of Fadden as Leader, the Party Room agreed that 'with the party reuniting and in light of international events, there was no need for a Deputy to be appointed'.

+++ Anthony as Trade Minister embarked on a series of international visits in 1976, including to the Soviet Union. He returned unwell to Australia in July. Unable to shake his illness, ultimately identified as hepatitis, he was granted leave from Parliament from 20 October and did not return until 1 February 1977. During that period, the Party Room appointed Ian Sinclair Acting Leader and Peter Nixon Acting Deputy.

Scullion was a member of the Northern Territory Country Liberal Party and sat with the National Party in the Commonwealth Parliament. He was the first senator to hold the Party's Deputy Leader position, all others, as with Leaders, having come from the House of Representatives.

Nash was ruled ineligible to be a senator by the High Court of Australia on 27 October 2017, due to her father's British heritage.

The Party did not elect a formal Senate leader prior to 1935, instead agreeing that one of its number be authorised to act as the channel of communication with ministers in connection with the business of the chamber. Senator William Carroll (WA) undertook the role for several years until ill health forced a change in October 1935. The statement to the Senate by Senator Charles Hardy (NSW) on 3 October 1935 that he had been appointed as Leader of the Party in the Senate became controversial when Senator Edward Johnston (WA) claimed Hardy was wrong and that he had in fact been elected to represent the Party on the same lines as previously. Hardy disputed Johnston's statement, as did Senator Macartney Abbott (NSW) who declared that Hardy 'has not made any statement that he was not fully authorized to make'. Hardy's position as Party Leader in the Senate was approved at a Parliamentary Country Party meeting on 10 October 1935. As a result, Johnston, who insisted that the Senate was 'a non-Party House' and that he was responsible only to the State of Western Australia, advised the Senate on 22 October 1935 that he had 'tendered to Dr. Earle Page my resignation as a member of the Federal Country Party. In future, I shall sit in the Senate as a Western Australian Country party senator'. This, however, appeared to have no negative impact on the Country Party or Coalition governments or oppositions in the Senate between October 1935 and Johnston's death in office in September 1942. (Commonwealth Parliamentary Debates, Senate, 3, 9, 10, 22 October 1935, pp. 462; 522-523; 598-601; 867-869).

In the period 1938 to 1949, the Party's Senate numbers gradually diminished from four to one, making it hardly necessary to elect a leader. However, Walter Cooper most likely fulfilled the role on an informal basis. He was undoubtedly Leader from July 1947 to December 1949 as he was the only Country Party senator. He was Deputy Leader of the Opposition in the Senate from 19 March to 31 May 1947 and Senate Leader of the Opposition from 1 July 1947 to 19 December 1949. Country Party numbers increased to five at the December 1949 elections, from which time leadership positions were regularly filled.

Note:

Up to the 1950s, the Whip was also referred to as the Secretary of the Party. From the mid-1970s, the Party also elected a Deputy Whip. The contemporary Party elects a Chief Whip and a Whip for the House of Representatives. The above list nominates those members who have been elected to the senior Whip position.

Sweet success: 14 March 1983 and the Party Room celebrates the return of Noel Hicks after a bruising campaign in his NSW seat of Riverina, which he won with 50.43 per cent of the two-party preferred vote. Hicks was successively elected Whip for the next 15 years, the second longest behind Winton Turnbull (Mallee, Vic), who held the position for 16 years, (left to right, back row) Bruce Lloyd, Ray Braithwaite, Bruce Cowan, Tom McVeigh, Doug Scott, Ian Robinson, Ian Cameron, Flo Bjelke-Petersen, Ralph Hunt, Ian Sinclair, Stan Collard, Peter Fisher; (front row) Bob Katter snr, Stephen Lusher, Doug Anthony, Noel Hicks, Peter McGauran, Ron Boswell (Federal Secretariat)

Vote NO: Country Party how to vote leaflet for the four referendum questions put by the Whitlam Government at the 1974 double dissolution election. The Country Party was particularly concerned with a proposal to make the size of the population, rather than elector numbers, the basis for determining the size of electorates, fearing it would lead to many more city electorates and fewer country ones. All four referendum questions were defeated (NSW Nationals)

Notes

* Selected under section 15 of the Constitution Act to fill a casual Senate vacancy

Liberal National Party of Queensland (LNP) from July 2008, following the merger of the National and Liberal Parties in that State, and continuing to sit with the National Party in the Commonwealth Parliament.

Martin, a Tasmanian senator who replaced Senator Jacqui Lambie when she was found to be ineligible to sit in Parliament because of dual citizenship, sat as an Independent. On becoming a National senator, he joined the NSW National Party, which he was able to do under Rule 1.3.1. of that Party's Constitution and Rules, as there was no National Party organisation in Tasmania.

inel Nash was ruled ineligible to be a senator by the High Court of Australia on 27 October 2017 due to her father's British heritage.

+ By-election

Kevin Hogan moved to the cross bench on 24 August 2018 in protest against another change in Prime Minister. However, he maintained support for the Government and still attended Parliamentary National Party meetings. He returned to the Government benches on 22 May 2019, after being re-elected as the National Party Member for Page, NSW, at the 18 May 2019 Federal election.

Liberal National Party of Queensland (LNP) from July 2008, following the merger of the National and Liberal parties in Queensland, and continuing to sit in the Commonwealth Parliament with The Nationals.

inel Joyce was ruled ineligible to sit in Parliament by the High Court of Australia on 27 October 2017 on the grounds that his father's New Zealand heritage made him a dual citizen at the time of the 2016 federal election. Having resolved the matter, he resoundingly regained his electorate of New England at a by-election 36 days later, on 2 December 2017.

def* Earle Page never knew that his 42 year hold on Cowper, NSW, ended at the December 1961 election, with the seat being won by Labor. Page died in hospital in Sydney on 20 December 1961, just hours before the declaration of the Cowper poll that day.

Notes:

* Includes ministers from the South Australian Liberal and Country League (LCL), Northern Territory Country Liberal Party (CLP), and Liberal National Party of Queensland (LNP) who sat with the Country, National Country and National Party.

 While acknowledged as the second most senior member of the Ministry, and acting as Prime Minister during absences of the Prime Minister, the title of Deputy Prime Minister was not included in official parliamentary records until 10 January 1968.

 The High Court of Australia sitting as the Court of Disputed Returns, ruled on 27 October 2017 that Joyce and Nash were ineligible to sit in Parliament as they each held dual citizenship at the time of the 2016 federal election. At the same time the court ruled that Canavan, whose mother had Italian heritage, was eligible to remain in Parliament. Having stood down from the Ministry on 25 July 2017, he was reinstated to his Resources and Northern Australia portfolio on 27 October 2017. Prime Minister Turnbull temporarily took over Joyce's portfolios from 27 October 2017. Nash's Regional Development and Local Government and Territories portfolios were taken over by Chester, while the Liberal Party assumed the Regional Communications portfolio. The National Party's Senate Leader, Nigel Scullion, became Interim Parliamentary Leader, pending Joyce's return to Parliament following a by-election on 2 December 2017 in his electorate of New England, NSW. Nash's Senate position was filled by a Liberal from the NSW Joint Liberal/National Senate ticket for the 2016 election. Nash was replaced as Deputy Leader of the Parliamentary Party by Victorian Senator Bridget McKenzie at a Party meeting on 7 December 2017. Having clarified his citizenship position, Joyce overwhelmingly retained New England. On the return of the by-election writ on 6 December 2017 Joyce returned to Parliament and resumed his portfolio and Deputy Prime Minister responsibilities. During the 40 days of Joyce's absence from Parliament, the Liberal Party's Foreign Minister, Julie Bishop, was Acting Prime Minister on three occasions when the Prime Minister was overseas, although the position of Deputy Prime Minister remained vacant. Prime Minister Turnbull announced a major reshuffle of his Ministry on 19 December 2017. Joyce resigned to the backbench from 26 February 2018, with Michael McCormack becoming Party Leader and Deputy Prime Minister. Further ministerial adjustments were made, effective from 5 March 2018.

Research Programs and Publications

Information on various aspects of the National Party of Australia, its history and personalities, can be found in many libraries and archives around Australia. Extensive collections are held by The Page Research Centre Library at Charles Sturt University, Wagga Wagga, NSW, and the National Library of Australia and the National Archives of Australia in Canberra. Acknowledgements

Many people have directly or indirectly helped in the preparation of this publication – too many to name individually, because I would without doubt unintentionally omit one or two and thereby, understandably, upset them. I have no wish to do that.

In a collective sense, therefore, I am indebted to the many Party members, secretariat and parliamentary staff, as well as current and former parliamentarians, who I have badgered for confirmation on background information, statistics, or the identities of people in historical photographs. May I simply offer a most sincere thanks to you all.

I similarly owe thanks to staff in the Commonwealth Parliamentary Library, the Page Research Centre Library at Charles Sturt University, Wagga Wagga, NSW, and the National Library of Australia, the National Archives of Australia, and Auspic in Canberra.

I especially thank those people and organisations who have given permission for me to reproduce photographs, documents and cartoons – all of which are acknowledged in the captions.

Despite the above, one person I must thank is Cecile Ferguson, a former work colleague and Federal Director, who willingly gave of her time to undertake the cover design and layout of the book.

And, by no means last, I sincerely thank John McEwen House Pty Ltd and the National Party of Australia for their support in bringing this project to publication.
